Reconnection — across time, across people.

You are entering Turraburra: story held in stone and starlight, still being lived today.

WONDER

The oldest sunrise you will ever stand under.

Deep time isn't a figure of speech here. The stars above the story wall are the same ones this Country has watched for longer than most of what humans call history.

TRUTH

What's etched in stone doesn't forget.

A wasp nest built over the story wall's markings let researchers date them — at least 55,000 years old, by the most conservative estimate. Lore and science, reading the same stone.

BELONGING

Some people never left. Everyone else can find their way back.

For the Iningai Nation, this has always been Country. For everyone else, belonging is something every person carries — even the ones who've forgotten where.

LIVING WORK

Caring for Country, in practice.

Fire-stick farming, carbon farming, spring restoration — work the Iningai Rangers do every week, by hand, not heritage kept behind glass.

Every journey begins differently — we welcome you to walk alongside us.

THE WAY FORWARD

A way forward, for whoever needs one.

What's been rebuilt here — Country, culture, a way of working — is offered as one example, not the only one. Wherever you're standing, there's a way back to your own Country too.
